Legal Talk: Communication Foundations in Law

Design by Alec A. Sarkas, CIDBE

Tuesday,
February 20, 2:30 p.m.
William Pitt Student Union
Room 827

This lecture will explore the relationship between communication and law, emphasizing the historical relationship between these two areas of study, and cultural practices. It will also draw attention to opportunities for students interested in careers in communication and law.

Before joining the Duquesne Law faculty, Professor Junker taught at The Open University in Britain, and held the first cross-border academic position in Ireland by being a full-time member of faculty at both Queen's University of Belfast in Northern Ireland and Dublin City University in Ireland. Prior to that, he taught part-time at Geneva College, Duff's Business Institute, and the Community College of Allegheny County.

Professor Junker's areas of concentration include: law and rhetoric, law of the European Union, law and science, public international law, and international environmental law.

Professor Junker received his B.A. from Penn State University, his J.D. from Duquesne, and his Ph.D. from the University of Pittsburgh. He was also a Fellow in German Law with the Universities of Tübingen and Bonn and the Justice Ministry of North-Rhine Westphalia in Germany. Upon completing law school, he clerked for the Honorable James E. Rowley, President Judge of the Superior Court of Pennsylvania, and litigated cases as Assistant Counsel to the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Resources.
